Learning & Performance Conference

Improving job performance through leadership excellence for finance & banking professionals

We are pleased to invite you to an interactive learning & development experience that will inspire you to become an effective leader, providing the necessary tools and skills to improve the employees’ performance across your organization.

Conference overview

Financial & banking leaders have a tremendous impact on organizational climate and performance. The behaviors they personally demonstrate – as well as those they implicitly and explicitly endorse – set the tone for employee behavior throughout the organization. Recent studies have found that employees often leave organizations because of poor organizational leadership & managerial skills. Today’s leaders, then, must develop new skills to serve as inspirational role models and provide strategic direction to employees if they hope to achieve exceptional performance and ensure the success of their organizations.

Practice has shown business coaching and executive coaching to be the most effective means for achieving sustainable growth, change and development in individuals, groups, and organisations. Organisations that have embraced coaching and stuck with it have noticed remarkable results. Coaching, done well, can be a powerful tool in implementing change, increasing motivation across teams and addressing individual performance issues, thereby harnessing the potential for improving results. The conference focuses on most important principles of an effective leader and how to help you coach your team for increased performance and extraordinary outcomes.

An empowered organisation is one in which individuals have the knowledge, skill, desire and opportunity to personally succeed in a way that leads to collective organisational success.

Assessing and Developing Leadership in Managers and Staff – and measuring difference
The role of psychometrics in Leadership Coaching – the vital coaching tool?
Excellent coaching and development relies significantly on creating realistic and accurate self awareness in the individual about their leadership style and their leadership effectiveness. This enables people to consider and select development activity which is appropriate and which works. And importantly, how do we, the coach, the manager, and the client, know that any of this works. One element is to identify and target desired outcomes – but these may not emerge for some time after development activity has taken place. We can however use psychometrics to assess whether mindset and leadership style has changed fairly quickly as a result of coaching and mentoring activity. If it has we can be confident that the outcomes will be achieved. If not, then the outcomes are unlikely to emerge. This is like providing a torch for the coach to see where their activity is making a difference.

The first part of the workshop will look at the role of psychometrics in coaching and will feature:
- MTQ48* – a unique measure of mental toughness and mindset – central to all coaching activity
- ILM72* – a normative measure of leadership style and leadership behavior
- Jungian Card Sort exercise – which assesses behavioural preferences across 4 scales

 Workshop 2:
Emotional Intelligence for Finance and Banking Managers (GMP)
Facilitator:
Rajesh Misca
CEO Corpstrat Academy

Coaching and Emotional Intelligence are inseparable!
The personal behaviour of leaders impacts business results. When managing talent, it is vital that you possess good self-awareness, self confidence and Emotional Intelligence. The purpose of coaching is to unlock people’s potential to maximize their own performance. Training leaders to adopt a transformational coaching approach is the single most powerful way to develop the four fundamental emotional intelligence components proven to impact high performance: self-awareness, self-management, social awareness and relationship management (Forbes, 2001). Having been built on the two pillars of awareness and responsibility, our inspiring Global Managers Program (Personal MBA) allows leaders to develop emotional and social competencies that give them greater agility, gain their people’s trust and create vision that connects and inspires their organization. Participants gain the confidence to achieve their potential and to become catalysts of change and high achievement across their organization.
